Welcome to Module 6 . . . You've made it! You're here at last!

Module 6 is all about making sure that you get on the path toward implementation in full scale ~ and sustainability.

Murphy's Law of Coaching: When the environment falls under pressure ~ coaching and training are the first casualties of war!

As odd as it may sound, what should happen is exactly the reverse! When the environment falls under pressure, we should coach and train MORE not LESS. The more coaching we do ~ the less firefighting we will do. When you consider all you have learned in this program, you know how important it is to provide support for each and every team member. When pressure shows up in the environment that is when your staff need to continue coaching!

In this module, we will be giving you the last of our handy tips and tricks and really focusing on how you can sustain the process and gain momentum.

FINAL REVIEW:

As you read each paragraph below, consider all that you learned in each module. This will help cement what you have learned and all that we have covered into your coaching practice.

In Module 1, we spoke about the definition of coaching, and we introduced you to the "Cloud Chart". We said that all things in coaching emanate from properly set and governed standards.

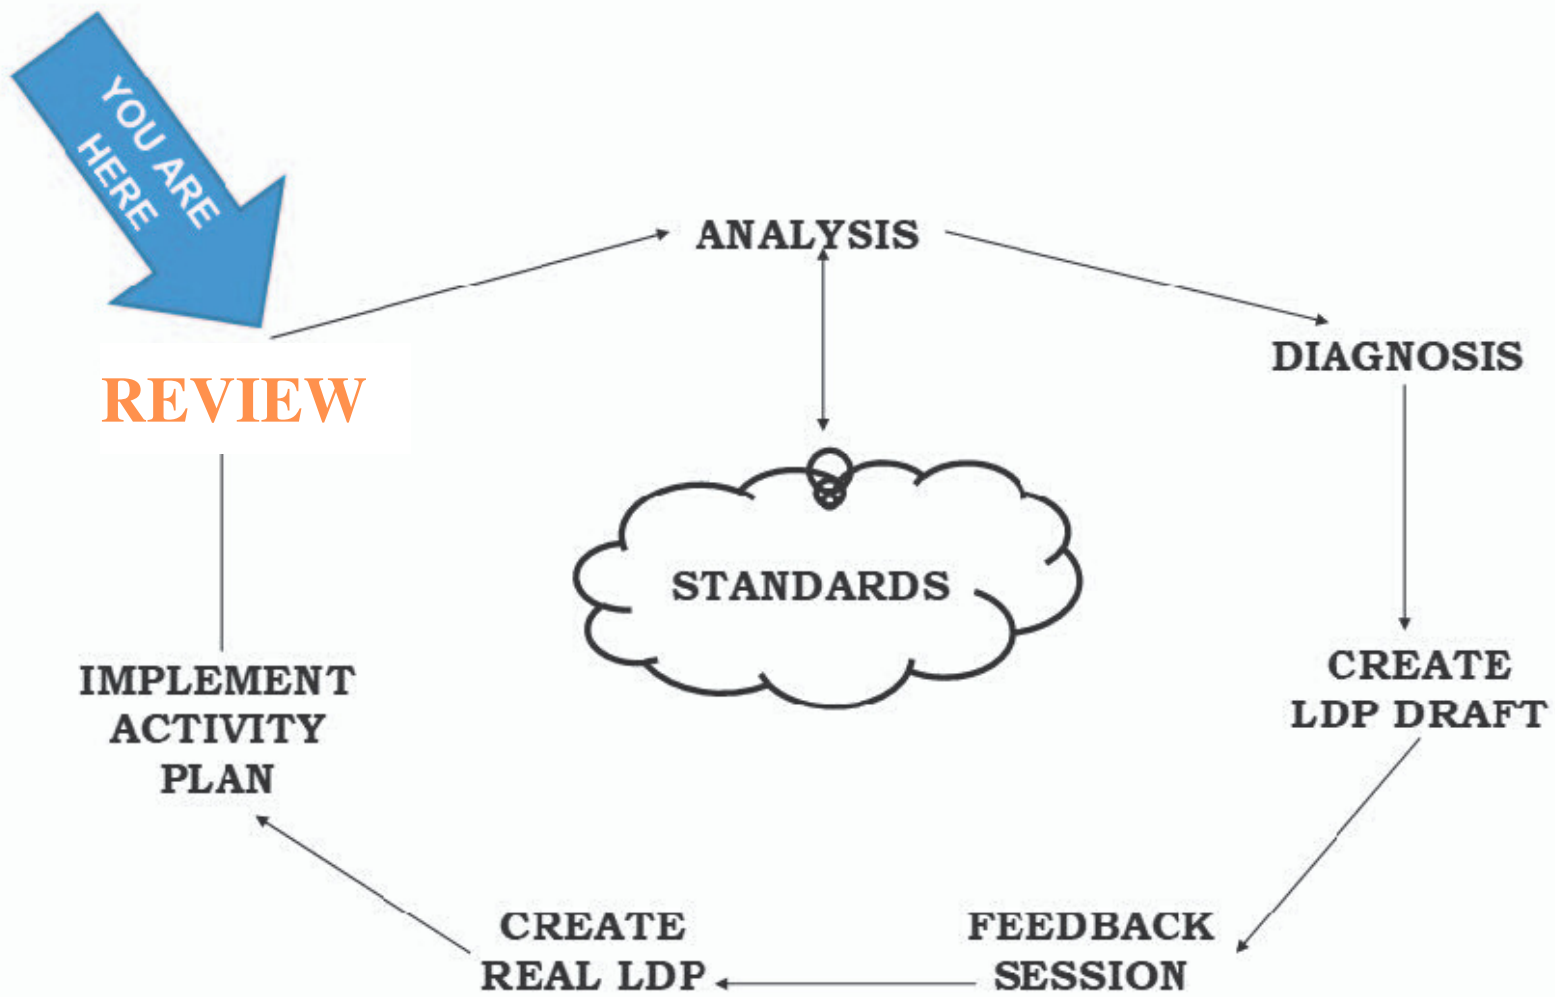

In Module 2, we guided you through the standard setting process – and spoke about how challenging it can be to get standards right!

In Module 3 we covered the Analysis process – and practiced gathering data to construct LDP Draft documents. We focused on trends and looking for patterns in employee behaviour.

In Module 4, we made use of all that information you gathered during your analysis process. We did a diagnosis in looking through your LDP Draft documents, and began to formulate a great feedback process. We then set up for the feedback, considering the environment, the tools we would need, and we invited our coachees to their first coaching session. By now, you should have some REAL LDPs in place with your team.

Module 5, we took a much deeper look at development activities and activity planning.. After all, this is where the real work is done! When people practice the skills they are looking to develop – and practice them in appropriate ways, positive development is almost always the outcome!

You are now about to complete your final Module of The Peak Performance Coaching Company!
